

sokanu

Personality Report

Your personality is comprised of several factors ranging from how independent you are to conscientiousness you are. Understanding your personality can be a useful component for determining not only what career you might fit with, but what kind of person you are.

Add More Insights to This Report

You can get more from this report! Answer a few more questions to unlock additional insights.

Insights

You are eager to take on new challenges or initiatives. You like setting goals, and then working persistently to achieve those goals. Your desire for excellence and persistence to see things through will serve you well in your professional life, but can be imposing on others in your personal and family life. It is helpful to sometimes step back and realize others may not naturally be driven by the same factors as you. You are a natural leader, and are energized by having an impact on others. Your ability to influence people will come in handy on the the job, particularly in senior management roles; however, even in junior roles you can help co-workers and peers. You should watch out for the tendency to be too rigid, and to become overly invested in your opinion of how to do things. Since you put a lot of weight in your own beliefs, it's important to remember to value other people's input and opinions.

Strengths

- You're often considered calm and collected. It's hard to faze you, which means that you cope well with stress. You tend to bounce back quickly when things go wrong, and experience a high sense of general well-being.
- You are able to gain energy from other people, where others might get fatigued. This makes you particularly suited for team or sales oriented activities.
- You love people and work hard to make them happy. You are friendly and outgoing, outspoken, but considerate. Your peers see you as very social; indeed, you often shine brightest when you are meeting new people and building relationships.
- You see the best in your friends and coworkers and try to make them feel comfortable and valuable. You trust